Just a few weeks ago, a famous Taiwanese director Chi Po-lin (齊柏林) was accidentally killed in a helicopter crash. The entire nation was shocked by the news, for his documentary feature Beyond Beauty—Taiwan from Above (《看見台灣》) was so influential that even the president Tsai Ing-wen said that “his passing is a tremendous loss to Taiwan.” Here we find how influential and powerful an artist can be in society. Yet, at the same time, it is commonly perceived that literature, art, or humanities in general, has no practical use, which is why some science people look down upon the humanities. What is your opinion regarding the role of humanities in modern society? Is it useless? If not, what is its use? If people argue for the abolition of the humanities departments from the university, how do you persuade them that this is not a wise move, and that humanities education really matters? How do you convince them that a future without humanities is a nightmare? (100%)
